New Liquor Ruling Concerns Autoists

According to an opinion by Attorney-General Brown upon a query from District Attorney Johnson of Curry county, the owner of an automobile who makes occasional trips into California and brings back intoxicating liquor, cannot be termed as a common carrier and is hence liable to arrest for transporting the liquor.

If he does undertake to run a regular trip and comply with the requirements of "common carriers" he must of course require those to whom he brings the liquor to sign up for it exactly as the express company does at present.

As far as is known at the present time, no automobile owner has ever required an affidavit of anyone in Ashland to whom he has brought liquor nor of the passengers whom he carries be they loaded with liquor internally or externally. The attorney-general's opinion follows:

"A common carrier is one who undertakes for hire to transport the goods of those who may chance to employ him from place to place for hire. The tests whether a carrier is a 'common carrier' are, first, he must be engaged in the business of carrying goods for others as a public employee; second, he must undertake to carry goods of the kind to which his business is confined; third, he must undertake to carry by the methods by which his business is conducted and over his established roads; fourth, transportation for hire and fifth, and action must lie against him if he refuses without reason to carry such goods for those willing to comply with his terms."

The Roseburg Review holds that should the opinion of the attorney-general be upheld by the supreme court of the state, it will not be a crime to bring the prescribed amount of liquor into Oregon by private conveyance.

WHERE THE FOUR-LEAVED CLOVER GROW

There's a spot down in the meadow,
Where I always love to go,
And takes my cares or fancies
Where the four-leaved clover grow.

There, I fancy, live the fairies,
And the daisies tall and fair,
At me seem ever nodding
As I build castles in the air.

And I watch the lark ascending,
As he higher, higher, goes;
I forget all care or sorrow,
Where the four-leaved clover grows.

Shall I tell the real sweet secret
Why I love this one spot so?
It was here my troth was plighted
Where the four-leaved clover grow.

Horseless Age Is Not Yet Here

This is called the horseless age. Yet the last census figures show an annual production of 1,187,000 vehicles, of these 558,400 are buggies, mostly used for pleasure purposes and light business. The carriage makers, far from giving up the ghost, have just announced their 44th annual convention at Cincinnati next month.

Theoretically a cheap automobile is as inexpensive as a horse and carriage. It certainly is if the horse is a fair roader, is well fed, and if carriages are maintained in good order.

But many of the country people have run a horse and carriage on a very inexpensive basis. The horses are fed in pastures without any payment in cash. It costs but little to operate these outfits. The owners are not proud, and are philosophically content to jog along at five or six miles an hour.

They get lots of pleasure out of these rigs, and their daily work is facilitated by them.

In this way a market is created that tends to keep carriage makers busy. While fine turn-outs are not very common nowadays, a good many people still love horseflesh and demand handsome and substantial carriages.

Tradespeople still make big use of horses and wagons for delivery and trucking purposes. The average grocery boy is hardly fit to be trusted with the complicated mechanism of an automobile.

The horse is still the great democratic motive power. The carriage makers will live for many a day to provide his equipment.
